The River Godbout.

Contributed by one of its now oldest Salmon Fishers.

Again on the Godbout's banks we've met
With trusty rod in hand,
And envy not the greatest Prince
Who reigns o'er happiest land.

For here from the world's cares we're free.
Beneath a genial sky,
While under the rippling waters bright
The silvery salmon lie.

Ready to test the utmost skill
Of the lover of angling art,
And give to the startled nerves a thrill
That pulses from the heart.

Then come with me to the "Upper Pool,"
Well known on thy glorious stream,
And prove for thyself, if doubter thou art,
That its treasures are not a dream.

And take thy stand on the "Gravel Bank,"
Where the water glides swiftly by.
And over its surface lightly cast
The tempting "Fairy Fly."

It touches the water,—a moment floats,—
Then quickly disappears;
With a magic tug! and the line runs out!
Now Piscator comes thy fears!

Still hope prevails o'er every fear
That the victory will be thine,
Should no mishap occur in the fight
To break thy fragile line.

But a ready hand and watchful eye
Alone will success command,
And bring the gallant, tho' conquered fish,
At last to the Gaffman's hand.

Oft when "Salmo Salar" has seized the lure.
Quickly down in the water he goes;
But soon discovering the mistake he has made,
He tugs and shakes his nose.

But all in vain—so he angry gets
And perhaps, as a fish may—swears
But be that as it may, he soon dashes off,
And away through the water tears.

The line now runs out with lightning speed,—
The reel gives its music sweet ;
But dependence on these alone won't do,
So be ready with nimble feet.

For down the stream he may take a rush,
In his madness to break away ;
When thou must be ready to follow him up,
Or assuredly lose the day.

Again, in his rage to clear the hook,
With a spring he will dart in the air ;
And his frantic bounds again repeat,
Which will claim thy anxious care.

Then thou must be ready with courtier's ease
His vaulting feats to greet,—
Quickly lower your rod and make your bow,
Or misfortune you'll surely meet.

Your line will be snapped like a spider's web,
When off goes the hoped-for prize ;
But then too late, you may stamp and rave
Who such acts polite despise.

At last the dubious fight is o'er—
The battle's been fought and won ;
And the coveted prize lies safe ashore,
A beauty !—a twenty-pounder good !
Hurra ! a prettier Salmon sure
Was ne'er seen beneath the sun !
